Dogs and Whiskers.

"You may not have noticed it, but it is a fact, that some how or other whenever a man buys a dog he almost always gets one to match his whiskers or hair." The speaker was a wellknown local dog fancier, and he was talking about dogs in a certain hotel parlor with a group of friends, among them a reporter of the New Haven (Ct.) Palladium, Everybody laughed derisively, but the speaker indignantly said: "It's just so! But whether they do it 'unconsciously," he added, "I don't undertake to say. Why, look up and down the streets any day and you will see that it is true. Take - (naming a prominent divine), his whiskers are white, and he is chased around by a white hound. Then take Professor Lthe dancing master. Didn't you ever notice that grayish fox-terrier that follows him light-complexioned men who possess setter dogs with shaggy hides matching their owner's whiskers to perfection. Why, there goes such a case now!" Sure enough, on the opposite side of the street a well-known citizen of light beard was seen walking down the street with an English setter trotting along beside him. "It's funny, but it is true just the same," said the fancier, and this time the party didn't know

"Penny Wise and Pound Foolish."

How many people purchasing an article take the cheapest, then putter and scold because it does not last. If it is a clothes wringer it breaks the back of the poor woman who has to use it. The Empire Wringer, made at Auburn, N. Y., by a new arrangement, does not have the crank attached to either roll, and the purchase gear saves more than half the labor and it outwears two ordinary wringers.

A DEAD CUSTOMER.

Flowers. [New York Sun.]

"Did you ever have a decidedly odd customer?" asked a reporter of an up-town florist. "Yes," said the florist. "Who was he?"

"A dead man. It was a post-mortem order." "And what did the dead man want of flow-

"He wanted them for his funeral!" "Well, I've heard a good deal of live business men, but this is the first time I ever heard of a dead customer." "I shall explain it to you. There lived, three blocks from here, in a tenement-house district, a cynical old gentleman, who spent his time with his books and his thoughts, and was a stranger to everybody. He was a disciple of Schopenhauer, and might have been regarded as a harsh critic from another planet who had been shipwrecked on this little onehorse island in space and was sorry for it. The only gleam of sunshine in his life was that he hadn't a kinsman, a friend, or an acquaintance

"One day when he was very old he was sick unto death. To divert himself during the tedium of dying he contrived a post-mortem joke. He had $500 which he did not wish to leave to anybody. Though he was a stranger in the world, the idea came to him that he would spend the money in having the same kind of a funeral that other people had. He sent for a business agent, unfolded his plans for the funeral, and then died with a half-cynical, half-amused smile on his face. "The agent ordered the coffin, engaged the carriages, hired pall-bearers, gave the minister a few points for a short eulogy, and then came to my store and bought the flowers. "There wasn't a mourner in the little church where the last services were held. There wasn't a person in the church whom the dead man had ever known. There wasn't a person in the city who wasn't a stranger to him. But the coffin stood under the pulpit covered with anchors, broken columns, pillowed doves, and broken lutes bearing such mottoes as 'Goodby, Old Comrade, 'At Rest,' 'Farewell, Friend,' 'Still Remembered,' etc. They were the flowers which the dead man had bought. I imagine there must have been a sneer under the coffin lid. I believe there were six hired pall-bearers. "They put the odd old gentleman and his flowers into the hearse and carried him to his resting-place. The carriages afforded the tenement-house neighborhood a free ride to the cemetery. No tears were shed at the grave, the pall-pearers got their pay, and it was a very pleasant funeral."

At the Far End of the Earth. [Chicago Herald.] Fiji Islander-Ho, he! He, he! Quick, Matesi! I've caught a missionary. Second Islander (running up and examining the game)-We're in great luck. Yum, yum "What'll we do with him?" "Put him in the soup."

The Revenge of Time.

[Lowell Citizen.] Tapeyard-Who is that stunning girl you raised your hat to? Ribbonley-Miss Goldie Bullion.

Tapeyard (timidly)-She didn't return your courtesy. Perhaps she doesn't know you. Ribbonley (bitterly)-No! she does not know me now: but when I am the only young man at Ocean Foam next Summer she will not only know me, but pine for me in vain.

Who Wounded Gen. Hancock

A claimant for the honor of having fired the shot which wounded Gen. Winfield S. Hancock at Gettysburg is put forward by Augustus Michie, of Washington, in behalf of Serg't W. R. Wood, Co. H, 56th Va., which was part of Garnett's Brigade, of Pickett's Division, Longstreet's Corps. Mr. Michie says that his brother was commanding Serg't Wood's company, and gave the order to fire during Pickett's charge July 2, 1863. Capt. Michie saw a mounted Federal officer advance at the head of a column of apparently fresh troops. He inquired of his men whether any of them had a cartridge left, and Serg't Wood replied that he had one, and desired to know whether he should shoot the officer: that he then directed the Sergeant to shoot, which he did, and that the Federal officer immediately fell over and would have been dragged by his horse but for assistance rendered by Federal officers, who extricated him.
